Suppression of thermal runaway induced by thermal abuse in large

Thermal abuse is a common battery safety testing method and the LIB will experience a Heat-Temperature-Reaction loop generally [11, 12]. The solid electrolyte interphase film on the anode begins to decompose at 70-120 °C first [13, 14], then the electrolyte reacts with the lithium deposits/lithiated graphite and releases heat [15, 16]. Afterward, the decomposition ...

Thermal analysis of large-capacity LiFePO
